On your path...

Viewpoint overlooking the Millevaches Plateau (A)

Also called "Limousin Mountain" this large granitic plateau straddles the departments of Corrèze, Creuse and Haute-Vienne. Peat bogs, dry moors with heather, deciduous forests and meadows all contribute to its authentic landscapes.

View over the upper Creuse valley (B)

This river has its source at an altitude of 816 m south of Felletin on the Millevaches plateau. It runs 264 km and crosses the Creuse, the Indre, the Indre-et-Loire and the Vienne rivers, then flows into the Vienne river. Its name comes from Celtic etymology, and means "deep valley".

Château du Bas Bouteix (C)

A private residence, from the 17th century, with a quadrangular main building with towers and corbelled turrets at the corners, and a straight, central staircase. Defensive elements are still in place (machicolations for dropping stones or boiling oil on the enemy, and musketry loopholes).

Fontfeyne Chapel (D)

This building dedicated to the Nativity of the Virgin Mary dates back to the 12th century and was part of an old hospital run for centuries by nuns. Several restorations were carried out in the 15th and 19th centuries. It houses a polychrome wooden pieta from the 16th century.

View over Felletin and the bell tower of Sainte-Valérie (F)

A small town located in the upper Creuse valley, north of the Millevaches plateau, and which built its wealth on trade. The church at Sainte-Valérie, decorated with gargoyles and statues, was founded by Benedictine monks and has one of the most beautiful Gothic bell towers in Limousin.
